

Summarized Findings on Dr. Edem Adzogenu

Dr. Edem Adzogenu is a Senior Advisor on Innovation & Digitisation at the Africa CDC. His work spans the public, private, and civic sectors, focusing on innovation, economic development, pan-African integration, and social transformation. He co-founded the AfroChampions Initiative, where he currently serves as Co-Chair, playing a pivotal role in establishing innovative public-private partnerships to enhance the role of the African private sector in regional and continental integration. This platform collaborates closely with the African Union and regional institutions, employing innovative approaches like technology investing, novel financing instruments, and intergovernmental policy design to drive African integration and transformation.

Dr. Adzogenu's contributions extend globally, as he is an accomplished specialist in investment facilitation, government affairs, and international crisis management for businesses and global investors operating across Africa and Asia. His expertise includes advising Fortune 100 companies and G7 countries.

Recently, Dr. Adzogenu received recognition for his role in developing the TrustedTravel Covid-19 protocol, a pass tool that simplifies the verification of public health documentation for travelers during border crossings.

Furthermore, as a physician by training, Dr. Adzogenu has been actively involved in coordinating, formulating, and managing development programs in the health sector, not only in Ghana but also across the African continent. His multifaceted expertise and dedication span various sectors and geographies, making him a prominent figure in driving positive change and innovation.